The South Carolina Railroad is in trouble. If there is an institution in the State which clings to the cherished past, it is this company. The old Bank of the State was once its twin ally, and the South Carolina College was the Alma Mater of both. But the bank has long since passed away. The Cellege is closed; the commingling of white and colored pupils drove away its old patronage. The railroad alone survives, and the power it represents is now assailed.

It is the oldest railroad in the world. When it was first planned its track was elevated some six or eight feet on a wooden trestel throughtout the entire length. It first ran to Auguste Ga.; afterwards a branch was built to Columbia. Before the war it was perfectly The South Carolina Railroad is in size, so that the cads stand apart like the claws of a fowel. His nails have fallen out. His face is not so badly swollen, but his features have an expres-

bia. Before the war it was perfectly solvent; its stock was above par, and its dividens were regularly paid. Its stockholders were regularly paid. Its stock-holders were the money people of the State, and their meetings were annual reunions of the best society. Chamberlain looked with a covetous chamberian looked with a covetous every upon this relic of a former civilization, and made strang propositions to Kimpton, the State's financial agent, to get possession of it, as well as the Greenville and Columbia Railroad. He succeeded as to the latter, but there was too much conservative loyality in the officers of the South Carolina Railroad to premit the wrock of their succeeded as to the latter, but there was too much conservative loyality in the officers of the South Carolina Railroad to premit the wrock of their succeeding the production of their succeeding the succeeding the production of their succeeding the production of the produ to permit the wreck of their road. In fact they waged an aggressive war against Chamberlain and his wrecks, and finally rescued the Greenville and Columbia railroad from their clutches.

Columbia railroad from their clutches.

This was an up-country continuation of the South Carolina Railroad. Though it was really owned by the latter company, it was never consolidated with it, but retained its separate incorporation. The same blow which is aimed at the one is aimed at the other.

Bills have been filed by Northern creditors to foreclose the mortgages upon both of them, and they have been notified of a motion for the appointment of a receiver, to be made before Circuit Judge Bond in Baltimore, on September 3. A preliminary order has been granted enjoing the officers of the roads from disposing of any of the property and the trustees under the mortgages and largest Southern bonholders from transferring or disposing of the securities they now disposing of the securities they now

It has long been known that these roads were insolvent. In fact, they have paid no dividens for many years, and on the 1st of last January they did not pay the interest upon their bonded debt. Since then they have tried to make some compromise with their creditors, but have failed to do so. Upon the coupons for this unpaid interest suit was brought in the United States Circuit Court, and judgment obtained at the last term. judgment obtained at the last term. Executions were issued and levied upon portions of the real estate of the company. The executioners were enjoined by United States District Judge Bryan, upon the intervention of the trustees under the mortgages. This precipitated the avalanche avalanche.

Among the questions of interest is,

"Who will be the receiver of these roads?" The position is worth $50,000 a year in money and a great deal more to an ambitious man in political power. Of course, there are many candidates for this bonanza. Pherhaps the most prominent among the South Carolina bondholders.

Lack William L. Trephalm But bonanza. Pherhaps the most prominent among the South Carolina bondholders is Col. William L. Trerholm. But, upon cour ing noses, it has been ascertained that the Northern bonholders are in the majority, and that the old South Carolina Railroad, with all its power, will pass into the hands of their chosen representative, whoever he may be. Among the men spoken of is Col. C. H. Simonton one of the South Carolina counsel of the Northern creditors against the road. This gentleman was the first and last receiver of the State, and is one of the Bank of the State, and is one of the presont trustees of the South Carolina College. He seems destined to close the eyes of the old allied powers of former civilization. Chamberlain, who drew up the bills, is now in Europe. Corbin, from his intimate association with that traveller, was thought to be the coming receiver. But why is not Chamberlain's name on record as an attorney? The counting of noses has been done North as well as South, and it is feared here that Chamberlain's long-coveted prize, the possession of these roads, is to be awarded him as their receiver. Think of it—Chamberlain once more in South Carolina, the representative of its law and of its capitol.

Governor Hampton will be easily representative of its law and of its capitol.

Governor Hampton will be easily tempted to let slip the warrents of a violated law against his predecessor. There is a coming election, and whenever any of the lesser Republicans, such as Sammy Green or Swalls, have shown a disposition to exercise his right to be a candidate, the administration has found it convenient to publish his misdeeds, as sworn to before the investigating committee. These small men are pigmies alongside of Chamberlain.

How will Governor Hampton receive him? How will he protect him from political persecution? Will any protection Hampton can give him save him from criminal prosecution?

The Republicans say that with a fair election they can carry the next General Assembly, and then elect their United States Senator. Hampton has pledged his word that they shall have a fair election. Chamberlain's wires may lead to the Senatorship. The $50,000 per annum for his service as receiver may be only pocket money for necessary expenses on the road to Washington.

The fusionists control the Charleston newspapers, and are endeavoring to suppress the Straight-out Democracy, as they did two years ago in the interest of C"_nberlain. One of the newspapers openly advocates their claim, and the other holds to its old policy of "watch and wait," until the fusionists shall have secured their delegation to the State Convention. As two years ago, the people are on the other side, they are certain of victory. They have learned their strength, and know that without newspapers they can control the party. There are some recent signs, however, of the newspapers changing front.

It is a sad sight to see an intoxicated person on the street. How much more so is it to see a dull and sickly Baby rendered so by the use of dangerous opiates? Dr. Ball's Baby Syrup contains nothing injurious and may be given to the most delicate Baby. Price 25 cents,

The other, aithough much further advanced in the disease, and almost sure to wast; away within anothr year, is at present as lively as a cricket, although loathed by the other patients. These are the first lepers ever admitted to this hospital, and they have been there only a short time. One of them, Abraham Brown, is a New Yorker by birth, and is 54 years old. The other, Emily Trenel, is a native of Santiago de Cuba, and only 19 years old.
